In Southwestern Oregon, 92 percent of all job vacancies require the job applicant to have some postsecondary education or less. Occupations with no education requirement and those requiring a high school diploma each accounted for about one-third of 2019 vacancies. One-quarter required postsecondary training or other certification. Postsecondary education includes individuals with education beyond high school, such as some college/university coursework, but also includes non-degree certificate programs, and associate degrees. The average starting wage for all job vacancies hovers around $16.41. There is a significant difference in wage when separating educational requirements. Read the full article here.
